Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

This row of ten two-story, two-bay wide early Italianate-style brick houses with shed roofs and simple brick cornices were built c. 1870. Only a few of the houses retain their original brick facades, which were always painted; the rest have been covered with formstone.

The houses are two stories in height, 12', 12'8", and 13' wide (14' for the west end house), and occupy lots 75' deep. Each house is two rooms deep and there is no backbuilding, the kitchen being located in the tall basement. The houses are constructed in common bond and were originally painted. Each house has a single hooded chimney located at the rear corner of the house. The shed roofs are capped by a brick cornice consisting of four rows of slightly projecting stretcher bricks set above a frieze area decorated with a row of brick dentils. The brick cornice has been covered over with formstone on those houses which have been formstoned.

The tall, narrow window and door openings have segmentally arched brick lintels, with plain tympanums and wood sills, on the first floor, and flat wood lintels and sills on the second floor. None of the original 2/2 sash survive and most openings have been filled with 1/1 replacement sash. Doorways have narrow single-light transom, and show a variety of replacement door types. The houses sit on high basements, lit by a tall sash, also with a segmentally arched brick lintel. Each house is reached by five to seven brick, concrete, or wooden steps, most of which are set parallel to the façade.

Builder/Architect

Prepare both a summary paragraph of significance and a general statement of history and support.

This group of houses is significant as representing a very plain type of small street house that was constructed to provide inexpensive housing for the working class residents of the area, most of whom were German or Irish at the time of construction. The houses were built according to a pattern that was quite common to the city's working class neighborhoods of the middle and late nineteenth century. Recognizing that workers held different levels of jobs (and pay), builders created a hierarchy of house sizes (and prices) in the new neighborhoods going up to serve the expanding factory districts ringing the harbor and north-east and southwest of the central city. Builders acquired anywhere from an eighth to a half of a city block and built 14' to 15'-wide two-story houses on the main streets, and smaller, 11' to 13'-wide two-story houses on the narrower streets bisecting the blocks. Typically, in this period, main street houses might sell $1,000 - $1,500; small street houses for $600 - $800. Occasionally, the builder retained ownership of his small street houses to provide income for himself as rental properties. In this way people of varying means could afford to live in the same block. If they couldn't afford the purchase price of the small street houses, then they could afford the $8 or so a month it would cost to rent one, while they saved to be able to buy their own home later.

The houses are especially significant because of their proximity to the Baltimore & Ohio railroad yards, the nation's first railroad, and its related railroad-oriented industries, like car and rail shops. Housing of this type was built to provide inexpensive housing for the wide variety of both Irish and German immigrants who came to southwest Baltimore to work in railroad-related industries in the decades after the Civil War.
